

What is a Healthcare Access Review?

A Healthcare Access Review is a consulting engagement designed to identify risks created by healthcare delays, system constraints, and gaps in existing arrangements — before care becomes urgent. The objective is clarity around access, timing, and options.

Why It Matters

As healthcare in Canada is becoming increasingly constrained, assumptions about timely access can create serious risk. A proactive review identifies these challenges before choices narrow.

The Process

Turning strategy into clarity requires structure. The Healthcare Access Review applies this framework through a disciplined process designed to surface risks and reveal gaps.

Each review includes:

- Personalized information gathering
- Assessment of existing arrangements
- Risk and gap analysis
- Options and considerations
- Concise written reporting

Where appropriate, IMI Canada can also assist with implementing selected measures in coordination with existing advisors or professionals.

Who This Is For

This review is critical for anyone seeking to understand their exposure to healthcare access risk. It addresses the invisible threat that is now quietly affecting health, wealth and decisions making in ways most people are unprepared for.

Next Steps

Healthcare Access Reviews are offered by engagement. Initial conversations are exploratory and focused on fit. For more information, contact info@imicanada.co
